Shop for an appropriate "HDMI to DVI with audio" converter with audio outputs appropriate for your TV.. Composite video was the standard for many years but once you get used to high definition digital video anything less seems unwatchable..

Aside from this I live in the UK, the $30 adaptor cost an extra $30 to send according to UPS for which it then charged an extra £10 'brokerage fee' for paying a £10 import fee on my behalf.. Is that possible?Nov 4, 2012 7:42 AMPossible, yes, but as I wrote don't use composite video unless you want completely awful video quality.. Since yours has a DVI input, use it Nov 4, 2012 7:46 AMConverting to analog like component or Composite Will mean no hdcp ad IN netflix or iTunes stuff Will not workNov 4, 2012 10:23 AMI bought the monoprice component you suggested only to find out that both of the adaptors you mentioned are DVI to HDMI and not HDMI to DVI which is what apple TV needs.. I've read we can still hook it up with an adapter, but a second issue arose How would we hook up the audio? I know the Apple TV has an optical input.. Nov 3, 2012 3:23 PMSo if I bought the second one, I would plug my AppleTV in to it using a standard HDMI cable (male HDMI on both sides), then a DVI cable from the converter to my regular TV?Nov 4, 2012 7:15 AMYes, and you also need a stereo audio cable such as this one:Nov 4, 2012 7:36 AMPeople also said that we could hook up the Apple TV using HDMI to Composite/component cables (no adapter).

So how should we go about this? Posted on Nov 3, 2012 2:48 PM Helpful answers All replies Using an appropriate adapter or converter, you can connect your Apple TV to any number of display and audio devices imaginable.. Besides, to convert HDMI to composite you need more than just a passive adapter Composite video is an analog signal..

always liked Apple's products, and would prefer that One thing though Our tv has no HDMI port (Sony WideSo we're planning on getting an Apple TV or Roku.. You will want to pass the digital video signals without alteration HDMI to DVI is the only way to do that with your TV.. One side would I assume go into the tv input and outputs but where would the other 2 go? Aug 18, 2013 10:41 AM the rca cable should be attached to something which can play audio input'd in to it's RCA connectors be it a reciever or stereo or tv or a converter which make RCA into minijack and you connect your headset don't matter really.
